President Donald Trump has committed impeachable offenses. He has abused his power, obstructed justice, and violated the emoluments clause. These are serious charges that warrant his removal from office.

Abuse of Power

The most serious charge against President Trump is that he abused his power by pressuring Ukraine to investigate his political rivals, Joe Biden and his son, Hunter Biden. Trump also withheld military aid to Ukraine until the country agreed to investigate the Bidens. This is a clear abuse of power that undermines the integrity of our elections and our national security.

Obstruction of Justice

President Trump has also obstructed justice by interfering with the investigation into Russian interference in the 2016 election. He has fired

FBI Director James Comey, who was leading the investigation, and he has repeatedly attacked Special Counsel Robert Mueller, who is overseeing the investigation. Trump has also refused to cooperate with the investigation, including by refusing to answer questions from Mueller.

Emoluments Clause

The emoluments clause of the Constitution prohibits the president from receiving any gifts or payments from foreign governments. President Trump has violated this clause by continuing to profit from his businesses while in office. He has also refused to release his tax returns, which would show the extent of his financial ties to foreign governments.

The evidence against President Trump is clear and convincing. He has abused his power, obstructed justice, and violated the emoluments clause. These are serious charges that warrant his removal from office.
