- Primary Markets: Primary markets facilitate the issuance of new securities, allowing companies and governments to raise capital from investors. These markets play a crucial role in financing new projects, expansions, and debt refinancing.

- Secondary Markets: Secondary markets provide a platform for the trading of existing securities. Investors can buy and sell previously issued stocks, bonds, and other financial instruments, facilitating liquidity and price discovery.

Participants in Capital Markets

A diverse range of participants interact within capital markets, each playing a distinct role:

- Issuers: Companies and governments that issue securities to raise capital.
- Investors: Individuals, institutions, and investment funds that purchase securities to earn returns or generate income.
- Investment Banks: Financial intermediaries that assist issuers in structuring and underwriting new securities offerings.
- Broker-Dealers: Intermediaries that connect buyers and sellers of securities in secondary markets.
- Regulators: Government agencies responsible for overseeing capital markets, ensuring fair and orderly trading practices.

Capital Market Instruments

Capital markets offer a wide range of financial instruments that cater to diverse investment needs:

- Equities (Stocks): Represent ownership shares in companies, providing investors with potential for capital appreciation and dividend income.
- Bonds: Debt instruments issued by companies and governments, offering fixed or variable returns over a specified period.
- Derivatives: Financial contracts that derive their value from underlying assets, such as stocks, bonds, or commodities. They provide investors with tools for managing risk and speculating on market movements.
- Mutual Funds: Investment vehicles that pool funds from multiple investors and invest in a diversified portfolio of securities.
- Exchange-Traded Funds (ETFs): Baskets of securities that track specific market indexes or sectors, offering investors diversified exposure with low trading costs.

Regulations Governing Capital Markets

Capital markets are subject to a comprehensive framework of regulations aimed at ensuring transparency, fairness, and investor protection:

- Securities Laws: Govern the issuance, trading, and reporting of securities. These laws aim to prevent fraud, manipulation, and insider trading.
- Market Rules: Established by stock exchanges and other trading venues to regulate trading activity and maintain orderly markets.
- Financial Reporting Standards: Mandate companies to disclose financial information in a consistent and transparent manner, enabling investors to make informed decisions.
